The walls of Windsor Castle light up to Henry Dallal's extravaganza.

Windsor lights up

WINDSOR CASTLE became the spectacular backdrop for a gigantic slide show in September, when London photographer Henry Dallal was invited to project images from his book, Pageantry and Performance, as part of the Windsor Festival.

The 30-minute show used images from the book, projected on to a 40ft screen, accompanied by a light show played on to the castle walls. It was the first time the castle has been used for such a show.

The hardback Pageantry and Performance (reviewed in Professional Photographer, March 2003) depicts the working lives and the pomp and ceremony of the Household Cavalry.

The sellout show was accompanied by an exhibition of selected photographs at the Windsor Guildhall.

Wild website

A new website aimed at wildlife photographers has been launched. Free to join, it allows photographers to upload a maximum of 25 pictures to their online portfolios, together with details and a hyperlink to their websites. Additionally, it plans to sell members' images on their behalf as an online picture library.
